

For years my friends and family and I have commented that we would be happy to pay for cable or satellite services if only we could choose which channels we wanted to subscribe to. Currently in order to get the four or five channels I want to watch I must pay for a package of over 125 channels. That's 100 channels of overkill! Certain cable channels might go out of business due to lack of interest, but this is a capitalist society - supply and demand should rule cable choices just as it does other consumer spending.
